News and Comment

Again there's nothing special to report this month. We continue to watch for new technologies in the world of application development, but nothing really new has appeared that strikes us as significant. The Google Web Toolkit continues to mature is and being well accepted. What's most striking is the continuing growth of the Eclipse world. More companies and projects are being added to Eclipse each month. With Microsoft's top management attention being focused on consumer products, there is a very real chance that in the next few years Eclipse will surpass Visual Studio as the most widely used developer tool platform. We will continue to watch and report.
